Honolulu Roofing returns to the Top 10 after nearly doubling its earnings in 2014. The 13-year-old company surged to $4.1 million in revenue last year, a significant increase over the $2.1 million it posted in 2013.

Honolulu Roofing previously made the Top 10 in 2012, coming in at No. 10. It ranked No. 8 in the 2011 survey.

Among the jobs completed or started in 2014 was the Turtle Bay Resort green roof improvement project, Sheraton Maui Phase I, Halekauwila Place, the Hawaii Pacific University apartments at Aloha Tower Marketplace and the Honolulu International Airport's aircraft maintenance and cargo complex.

"Turtle Bay was a very challenging project," says Dora Fong, company president, of the resort's innovative green roof that covers approximately 60,000 square feet as part of its commitment to environmental sustainability.

The lower flat roofs of Turtle Bay Hotel were landscaped with contemporary patterns using river rocks and native Hawaiian plants. Honolulu Roofing worked in partnership with landscape designer Walters Kimura Motoda, Firestone Roofing Products

"Turtle Bay Resort's green roof renewal project was no small feat," Scott McCormack, vice president of real estate for Turtle Bay, says on Honolulu Roofing's website. "It was evident that the level of expertise was superior. I was impressed with their ability to get things done, managing the interface with all the subs, working with the GC, project tracking and proactive measures taken to ensure the roofing project progressed without interfering with the operations of our property keeping both guests and employees safe and satisfied."

Fong also notes that the "HPU apartments at Aloha Tower Marketplace was unique in that the Sarnafil décor system was installed, which has the appearance of metal roofing."

Honolulu Roofing garnered a pair of awards from the Roofing Contractors Association of Hawaii (RCAH) in 2014.

A key personnel move in 2014 by the Waipahu-based company included promoting Nalu Kahanaoi to superintendent.
